I'm guessing you were in an area where smoking was going on. They will go away within a day or 2. To help them disappear put water under your eyes before you go to bed. or lotion would do it to just make sure you don't get it in your eyes!Best of luck

They could be hereditary. I have the same thing and mine are REALLY bad. Unfortunately there isn't much you cna do about it. I wish there was but there isn't. Don't stress over it though cuz my friends and parents and people tell me that after a while they aren't even noticeable anymore after looking at someone for so long. I can totally relate though. Someone once thought i got punched in the eye because i had dark circle. brutal.

I have the perfect solution for you! They're called eyeSlices. They are little gelly pads that you place over your eyes for about 5 minutes. Then you will see results after your first try!

rub some moisturizer on them in the morning and it should make them look less dark, usually they're caused by like broken blood vessels and stuff but moisturizer is supposed to fix them
